Cayman National Donates to Cancer Society In Name of Famous Cricketer

Cayman National has made a generous donation of US$7500 to the Cayman Islands Cancer Society in the name of former West Indies fast bowler Joel Garner, who was in Cayman recently for the Cricket Celebration weekend.

“Joel sat at Cayman National’s table during the gala fundraising dinner on the Friday night of the cricket weekend,” explains Eric Crutchley, Cayman National’s President and Chief Executive. “It is not generally widely known or publicized the amount of charity work Joel and his fellow cricketers undertake. We so enjoyed his company and the opportunity to get to know him that we wanted to show our appreciation in some way.”

When asked about the various charities that he supports, Joel mentioned cancer, prompting Cayman National to make the contribution.

“I had a wonderful evening at Cayman National’s table and I’m pleasantly surprised at Eric’s decision to make a gift to the Cancer Society in my name,” said Garner. “I’d like to thank him and Cayman National. I am sure the Cancer Society will find this a great help in their efforts. I have been very impressed with the generosity and compassion of the people of the Cayman Islands and this is further proof of this.”

Christine Saunders of the Cancer Society was very pleased with the donation and stated, “we say a big thank you to Mr. Garner for choosing the Cancer Society, this donation will go a long way towards our financial aid to cancer patients and our educational programmes and we are very grateful that he thought of us.”
